Study Methodology

This survey, funded by NORC at the University of Chicago, was conducted by NORC with fieldwork by GfK Latin America.

The poll was conducted in Spanish with in-person interviews of 840 adults. The survey featured a national random route-sample of adults 18 years and older in Cuba. Preliminary fieldwork was conducted between April 9 and April 24, 2016. Very minor changes were made to the instrument, and these interviews were retained. The main field period was October 3 through November 26, 2016. The sample coverage excluded several areas in Eastern Cuba (with about 15 percent of the national population) that were damaged by Hurricane Matthew, which occurred in October 2016 in the midst of the survey fieldwork.

At the first stage, the population was stratified into three groups, based on population size, for each of three different regions of the country (Western, Central, and Eastern). At the second stage, secondary sample units were randomly selected from a full list of settlement districts. At the third stage, a starting address point was assigned for each district. Within-household selection was based on the sex and gender quotas.

Interviewers selected and visited 4,623 addresses where they had a contact. Among those contacted, 29 percent responded. Including non-contacts, the cumulative response rate is 18 percent. The overall margin of error +/- 3.8 percentage points at the 95 percent confidence level (including the design effect). Poststratification variables included age, sex, and urban or rural type of settlement. The data are weighted to reflect the Cuban population based on the 2012 Census.

All differences reported between subgroups of the Cuba population are at the 95 percent level of statistical significance, meaning that there is only a 5 percent (or lower) probability that the observed differences could be attributed to chance variation in sampling.

About NORC

NORC at the University of Chicago is an independent research institution that delivers reliable data and rigorous analysis to guide critical programmatic, business, and policy decisions.

Since 1941, NORC has conducted groundbreaking studies, created and applied innovative methods and tools, and advanced principles of scientific integrity and collaboration. Today, government, corporate, and nonprofit clients around the world partner with NORC to transform increasingly complex information into useful knowledge.
